THE LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM -- A SHORT HISTORY

On October 14, 1971, the federal government announced the establishment of the Special Employment Plan, a scheme designed to alleviate unemployment through the expenditure of $498 million in key economic sectors in every region of Canada. One part of that plan, the Local Initiatives Program (L.I.P.) provided for $100 million in federal financial assistance to projects which would create jobs and contribute to community betterment. These projects were to be suggested by municipalities, individuals and private groups.

The criteria for project eligibility were very broad. An approved project had to provide 30 man-months work, be non-profit and be of value to the community. Early in the program, the first of these criteria was amended to 15 man-months work and another $50 million was added for aid to private projects. These latter steps were necessary to allow the approval of more worthwhile projects which would have had to be turned down.

From the beginning of the program to the application closing date, January 31, 1972, 13,736 proposals were submitted, representing a total value of $480,683,000. The scope of these applications was infinite, representing nearly every form of community activity and service. With few exceptions, the proposals were unique and worthwhile.

Under this program, just over 5,700 projects were approved. It had been decided at the outset that the amount of federal assistance to any one area would be proportionate to the rate and nature of unemployment in that region. This explains the preponderance of approved projects in some areas.

The 5,700 approved projects created more than 92,000 jobs in all parts of Canada. This figure, however, represents only those jobs directly created by the program and does not account for the jobs created in those industries which benefited indirectly. The cost per job under L.I.P. was approximately $1,600, significantly less than the original forecast, based on an estimate of 70,000 jobs created.

The success of the program rests on several factors. First, and the chief one, is the excellent response from the people. Secondly, the program went directly to the people, thus circumventing the more traditional avenues open to government for stimulating the economy. Finally, L.I.P. excited the imagination of Canadians, producing a wide variety of new and innovative projects for the betterment of community services and facilities, and sparking a spirit of co-operation which enabled the program to succeed.
